📉 Last week, Bitcoin opened at 58k, not looking particularly strong. Indeed, last Monday, the BTC price lost 4%, giving well under the 7-day moving average. For a few days after that, the price has moved in the same range. Only on Thursday, the price has once again touched $59k, gaining 3% on that day. Yet the news of the new COVID strain has caused a sell-off across financial markets and crypto wasn't spared. On Friday, BTC lost 8.8% and touched $53k. Over the weekend, the price gradually recovered and the Bitcoin closed the week at -2.3%.

🚀 BTC dominance has remained at 42%. Meanwhile, various segments of the altcoin markets moved in different directions. Among large caps, ETH (+0.86%) and BNB (+4.6%) have done well as dips were quickly bought out. Cordano (-13%), Solana (-12.9%), and XRP (-8.3%) didn't hold up quite as well. Among smaller assets, "metaverse plays" such as SAND (+87%) and MANA (+41%) have continued on their vertical trajectory. Stoic held both assets, continuing to ride that wave while carefully managing risks.

👟 On Wednesday, Adidas announced a partnership with Coinbase, saying that "The Metaverse is currently one of the most exciting developments in digital". The Sandbox also tried to get some hype, tweeting to Adidas and earmarking some virtual "land" for Adidas Originals. It's unclear if there is a partnership, but that probably added fuel to the metaverse mania. Still, Stoic doesn't try to catch all the news and instead looks at price data. If the risk/reward for an asset is good, it will hold it.
